

Accountability

Have you ever met someone who truly believes in evolution? I never have. It's quite a stretch you know. If there is no God, and we did evolve, then there is no accountability.

If there is no God - then who makes the rules? We all do! We make our own! Think about it. If there is truly no accountability, then it truly doesn't matter what we do. Sociologists today tell us that "society" makes the rules. But is that true? How so? Some countries are run by a dictator. And in a democracy many of the rules are orchestrated by special interest groups. No - "society" doesn't make the rules. We can't even define who this hypothetical group called "society" is!

So if there is no God, then we all make our own rules, AND you have no right to impose your rules on me. I am my own god. I can do what I want. After all, we're only animals. Animals run their own lives without rules. And for many - it's a pretty cruel life!

When you scan the local newspapers these days, it's clear that life for humans is getting cruel, too. Could this be the reason? I do not believe that people would truly verbalize this as their excuse for violent crimes. Not yet - that is. However, I certainly believe this is one reason so many people consider life to be so cheap and expendable. And, as we continue down this path of evolutionary indoctrination, it won't be long before this defense is presented in court! At first it will be laughed out of the courtroom. But the fact is, once we've thrown the Bible out of our courtrooms and replaced it with evolutionary dogma, what defense does the court have?

So back to my original question; "Are You Studying Science From A Biblical Perspective?" If not, when will you start? If you have school students, are they being taught science from a Biblical perspective?

Jay A Auxt